The high sophistication of the Elven race carried over into the design of their armor and weapons. Their war helms had the appearance of being beaten out of a single sheet of a bronze-like alloy, with decorative raised golden vines adorning the surface. Embossed into the nose guards were the Elvish runes signifying that these soldiers were under the command of Gil-galad, the last King of the Ñoldorin High Elves. This authentically detailed replica is a reproduction of the actual filming prop used in The Lord of the Rings: The Fellowship of the Ring presented by New Line Cinema. The helm is crafted of reinforced polyresin, with precisely-molded details and coloring. Each helmet is presented with a wood display stand and a brass medallion. This adult collectible is strictly limited to 5000 pieces worldwide and is individually hand serial numbered inside the helmet to ensure authenticity.
