Known originally as a Cossack cavalry weapon, this Russian Shasqua was later adopted as the official officer's sword of the Soviet Union. The single-edged, moderately curved blade is forged from tempered high-carbon steel for strength. The hilt features a hand-carved hardwood grip with a spiral pattern, capped by a detailed brass pommel bearing Soviet symbols (star, sickle, and hammer). Elegant brass fittings also appear on the scabbard—black in color and fitted with a ring, allowing it to be conveniently worn at the hip. The blade is blunt, but you can sharpen it yourself.
